Stussopra Spell

This spell was reportedly invented in 1976 by Severus Snape, who was then a student of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.

The incantation is pronounced "stus-sopra" with the stress on the third syllable. The spell implies a cutting charm which has permanent effects and cannot be entirely reversed.

The wand-movement should be swift and decisive and give the effect if you slashed at your target with a blade. The wand should come to rest at the main impact point with the chest.

The most effect is the face.

The most severe wounds be most long and disfiguring.

The effect of the spell can be compared to a number of blades cutting about an inch deep into the skin at the impact point and then radiating outwards.

Garnines have been known to be severely scarred for life if the wounds were not treated with an antidote such as essence of Dittany.
